One evening as the sun went down
Among the golden hills,
And silent shadows, soft and brown,
Crept over vales and rills,
I watched the dusky bats a-wing
Dip down the dusky bats a-wing
Hearkening, beard a maiden sing,
"And you'll remember me."

"When other lips and other hearts". Came drifting through the trees,
"In language whose ercess imparts"
Was borne upon the breeze.
Ah, love is sweet, and hope is strong.
And life's a summer sea!
A weman's soul is in her song,
"And you'll remember me."

Still rippling from the throbbing throat,

Still rippling from the throbbing throat,
With joy akin to pain,
There seemed a tear in every note,
A sob in every strain.
Soft as the twilight ahadows creep
Across the listless lea,
The singer sang her love to sleep
With, "You'll remember me."

AUNT HERISSON.

Two young men, mounted on valuable steeds, burst into laughter as they left the Vichy road to take the one through

They certainly lacked generosity, but Cyrille, the maid of Mile de Smint-Juirs, made an edd figure, mounted on the stiff old mare Leda, riding behind her mistress. Her silhouette was that of

The young men rode past her into the rest, langhing and joking.

Mile. de Saint-Juirs overheard their silly banter. She turned her horse around and waited. She was handsome. The ride, the brisk air and also the indignation had beautified her complexion and given brilliancy to her blue eyes. Her nestrik palpitated like the heart of a wounded bird. She bit her lip and stood up in her stirrup, all trembling

The young men approached her a lit-tle abashed. One of them opened his mouth, but had not time to speak before a young man rode up behind them and gave their horses two vigorous cuts with a whip. Being fine animals, they tore down the road on a gallop, resisting the efforts of their chagrined riders to stop

"New, cousin," said the young man, saluting her, "let us return." And the ride back to the chateau was a happy one, for George de Sernay and his cous-in Mile, de Saint-Juirs were engaged, and neither doubted that the little incident was ended, not knowing how much sadness it would cause them.

The parents of the young cousin lived in a veritable chateau, but like Cyrille and Leda it had seen better days. The gardens were dilapidated, but the interior of the castle was still very beau-tiful. Mme. de Saint-Juirs had died when her daughter Marcelle was 3 years old. Her sister Herisson had cared for own. Mile. Herisson had never-cared to marry. She was very pious. She was continually in a discussion with M. de Saint-Juirs because years before he fought a duel in the garden behind the chateau, and she looked upon thim as a criminal.

When Marcelle was 20, her aunt tried to induce her not to marry, but all in-fluence was useless. Marcelle, after overcoming Aunt Herisson's numerous objections, was afflanced to her cousin, George de Sernay, an amiable and brave young gentleman.

The day after the ride George was seated at a table in the Casino of Vichy when two young men approached him. "Pardon, but were you not yesterday on horseback in the forest?"

"I was, monsieur." "We were also, my friend anti L"

to his parents and his flances. It was his first duel, and he was a little afraid. The next morning at the rendezvous he found the places marked off and the referee holding the swords by the points. He presented them to the duelists, and drawing back quickly said,

His adversary stood still, held his sword out straight and simply warded off each blow George gave without any attempt at zetaliation.

George nearly laughed. "Halt," said the referee. They took the first position again. Three times they went through the little farce until George lost patience and resolved to

In the evening two days later the family were assembled in the salon of the chateau. Aunt Herisson read the daughter were making out a list for the duvitations to the soirce following the betrothal. George was drinking a cup of tea. To explain his wound and his arm being in a sling—Annt Herisson had already eyed it suspiciously—he told that he had fallen from the top of a long flight of stone steps. His wound was made the pretext for a thousand little attentions from his gentle fiances. Marcelle put the sugar in his tea, stirred it, and I believe had her sunt's back been turned she would have tasted it for him, the regue!

Suddenly as Aunt Herisson read she became very pale and trembled with emotion. She held the paper close to her lamp and then dashed it on the floor.
"What is it?" asked M. de Saint-Juirs. "It is, monsieur, that I do not wish an assassin in my house." And turning to George, "Go immediately, never to

"No, madame."

"Then I have told you what to do." "Marcelle, go to your room!"
"It is not possible," said George in a voice that was cheked by tears.

Marcelle went to her lover's side, and with a tranquil conrage said in a hollow

"George, we must say goodby. I love on and will never love any one but you. Embrace me:"

The aunt was surprised at this audacity—to see an assassin embrace her niece before her eyes. Marcelle threw a last look at her lover and I will arrange everything." George was about to leave when Marcelle reopened the scene and raised her voice to defend him.

"If he had killed the other man, could understand, but when he is the wounded one and you call him an assassin is is very hard!"

"I have sworn," repeated the aunt, "and I will never consent to this marriage.

M. de Saint-Juirs, knowing her obstinacy, then said: "Very well. You will not stay here." "So let it be."

But now Marcelle spoke: "If, my aunt, you will stay, I will not marry without your consent. You replace my mother and have given me all the kind attentions of a mother. Though I will never cease to love George, I will not

The cablegrams announce that Colonel Cody, who will be remembered in London, has been returned as mayor of Nebraska. No better selection could have been made. Colonel Cody was the friend of a man named Boone, who discovered Kentucky in 1869. After marrying the granddaughter of a distinguished gentleman known as Sitting Bullfrog Cody was twice governor of Chicago and at one time was mayor of the Arkansas legislature. He also served in the Confederate army under Ben Butler, who so gallantly defended New Orleans erty, ince of Detroit rewarded him for his military services by sending him to congress, where he introduced a bill for the relief of the citizens of Buffalo. It was in this that he got his name Buffalo Bill. A chain is made up of bars, links and balls, like those used on the loom for weaving cloth, and there is a lever attached to the shoulder of each needle and extending from the part where the goods circle the needles down to the first bar of the chain, the latter resting in first bar of the chain, the latter resting in bearings. On the turning of a crank con-necting bevoled gears motion is imparted through the agency of an upright shaft to the chain cylinder, and every time the yarn is delivered to the needles a revolu-tion is made, the chain bar cylinders pre-senting a new bar to the levers of the ne-dles, and whenever a ball on the bar con-tacts on the lever the needle to which it belongs is pushed forward, and a mechan-ical device causes the needle to operate and form loops, thus knitzing. The story of Mrs. Maria Bensley is as romantic as any of the traditions of the middle ages. She was the wife of John Bensley, once a financial power in San Francisco. He failed and ran away, after Francisco. He falled and ran away, after hiding his proporty to escape his creditors, but she remained. After several transfers she got hold of the property, and, in turn, disposed of it to a fictitious woman, Mrs. de Tarente. Of course, when Mrs. Bensley wanted to do anything with the property, "Mrs. de Tarente" was always quite willing. She soon became a widow, but was still placed in many trying situations because of the creditors. One day she was dining at a hotel when a message was brought to her. She read it and fainted. As she fell she struck the floor with a clang. She was thin of body, but the peo-ple who lifted her found her wonderfully heavy, a fact which was explained when it was found that under her dress she wore a coat of mail, steel linked and bullet proof. It is believed that she were this armor till she died from heart disease. She traced her pedigree back to noble familles that never
